THE STORY OF AN ADVENTURER WHO RISKED ALMOST CERTAIN DEATH BY "SWAPPING IDENTITIES" FOR $50,000

ANOTHER MAN'S SHOES A Complete Novel Each Week in The Evening World

STNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS, abin Burton, adventurer, is in London, feed words. He meets stream teachhoire, mellioning, who is his physical double. Northcook at the latest physical double. Northcook at the latest physical double. Northcook at the latest physical double. Northcook at the physical double. Northcook at the physical double. Northcook at the latest physical converge, received the page of these weeks. Burton socrets, received the page of these weeks. Burton socrets, received the page of the SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS, Sangatte's "study" was just the sort of room I should have expected.

Crossing the room to the deak, my host opened a drawer and took out several sheets of typewritten paper.

With a pleasing sense of anticipation I accepted the papers and settled myself down comfortably in one of the easy-chairs. One glance showed me that I held in my hand the rough draft of a prospectus, for across the top of the first page, in big capital letters, ran the following announcement:

At that moment there was a sound of footsteps in the hall, and round sure that there was no one within the corner of the palm trees came the ever-to-be-accursed figure of Mr. Justice Beatchamp.

"Ah, Miss de Rosen," he began, with the kind of ponderous fatuity that passes for humor on the bench. "I find you, like the Arab maiden, beneath the palms."

"He offered his arm, and, after hesitating for the fraction of a second. Mercia got up gracefully from her chair and accepted it.

As she did so, she fiashed one swift glance at me. "You must tell me evening, Mr. Northcote," she said.

I bowd, and then stood there for a moment, looking after them, as the garnilous old gentleman, who obviquily imagined that he had scored off me, conducted her triumphantly out of the conservatory.

I was still puzzling my brains when I saw Lord Sangatte coming briskly toward me.

"Goodi" he said. "I thought I might find you here. Come along into the study."

I meant what I said," she whispered hurriedly, "Dor't go to Wood-tor to you in the perch hurriedly, "Dor't go to Wood-tor to you in the perch hurriedly, "Dor't go to Wood-tor to you in the capture of the rice they kept me hanging about ford. I—I can't explain to you; in-the text hand for the went upstairs and found a couple of chairs," I suggested.

"I can't stay here any longer. Sir Henry is waiting to take me back, in the evening me had a me and found a couple of chairs," I suggested.

"I said good-night to her and soon in the server of the conservatory.

I was still puzzling my brains when I saw Lord Sangatte coming briskly toward me.

"Goodi" he said. "I thought I me had a couple sent for me to go were the pole."

"I had good-night to her and soon food.

I arrived within a hundred feet of my house and was just getting out the contented provided the percentage of the contented provided that he wentured on his one embra-distingtion.

"I had good-night to her and soon in the percentage of the percentage of the percentage of the provided the provided that he wenture of the percen

I shook my bead. "No," I said, "I didn't want to tell her, I remained in dn't think he was necessary this a state of embarrassed silence." Which, you will observe, was "Oh, there's no need for you to speak," she added bitterly; "I know you too well." Then rage, murdersatisfaction pass scross my "cousin's" face. "Well, come along into the garden," he said, "unless you'd like tea or anything. Baradell's gone to town for the night, and York and Lady Baradell are out, but Aunt Mary's about somewhere. De you know where she is, Vane?" ous, ungovernable rage, flamed sud-dealy into her eyes. "You fool! Do fully

The state of the part of the p

Billy jerked his head up the road, "Quite close," he said, "just outside ting dewn on the bank, he bend woodford. A small white house on a roar of laughter.

the left. I mean to inspect it tonight." Then he paused. "Jack," he said, "Tm not quite happy about this shooting business."

Neither am 4," I answered truthfully.

The said, "The said, "I answered truthfully."

Neither am 4," I answered truthfully.

ROMANCE THAT IS FAR STRANGER AND MORE EXCITING THAN "TARZAN," BY THE SAME WRITER. AN ABSOLUTELY NEW, ORIGINAL IDEA IN FICTION NEXT WEEK'S COMPLETE NOVEL

IN THE EVENING WORLD

The Book on the Stands Will Cost You $1.25 You Get It for 6 Cents: